"Oh, don't be afraid! I won't hurt you!"

You tilted your head. A talking flower with a face..?

"Howdy! I'm Flowey! Flowey the flower!"

A voice in your head drowns out Flowey's voice and you can only hear two words.

You held the knife you have been hiding behind you all this time.

Your hand shakes with anger.

You dashed forward slashing your knife and feel a burst of white powder splashing on your body.

Once you open your eyes, the flower was terrified. He trembled in fear as he escapes underground. Then you realized that you killed a large, white, goat creature.

You feel that you should run, but the temptation to attack the monsters roaming around is far stronger.

You looked down on your knife, covered in whitish powder.

Chapter 7 by Bridget O'Toole

You go back, afraid now, to the water bottles, bucket, lotion, and power bars. You load everything into the bucket. Thus encumbered, you walk back to the corpse of the goat creature. None of the creatures have made a move yet but that doesn't mean they won't.

You pick up the creature's head in one hand.

"I wish safe passage to the sky! I will swear not to harm a-one of you who helps me! If none come forward, there will be retribution far worse than this!"

There is silence.
